To: Mr. John D. Stites II
CEO
J&S Construction Co.

Dear Mr. Stites,

I'm sending this letter of commendation in regards to our recent construction project which was implemented by your company, J&S Construction.

There are several observations that I would like share concerning this project:

First, it was a partnership between your company and our church. We believe that it was a partnership blessed by the Lord. We were absolutely delighted with the implementation process and the end product. We could not have imagined that it could have been any better.

Second, the project had what we believe to be the best on-site superintendent anywhere in the nation. This manager made every effort to make our best interest his top priority. The J&S employees, and for the most part the sub-contractors, were dedicated, dependable, trustworthy and above all positive in the execution of their respective disciplines.

Third, as is the rule of successful Project Management, this project was completed under the approved budget and sooner than the committed time frame.

Fourth, the end product was more than we had hoped for. The Architect created a plan and a product that more than met our expectations. It accomplished all of our desired goals, and more. It is virtually impossible to please "all" of the people. However, I have not received the first word of negative feedback related to this endeavor. The new building tied all of our existing buildings into a complete campus environment. We now have the capability to go anywhere within our five buildings and never have to venture outside. Additionally, the Architect created a plan for our new building that made it look like it was built at the same time our other buildings were constructed. During this project we also renovated our kitchen and Fellowship Hall. When the project was complete, the new building and the old Fellowship Hall/Kitchen looked like they were a single building. Like I said, it was more than we had hoped for.

Finally, I suppose the best recommendation we can give is to affirm that we would recommend your company to anyone!

Best Regards,
Steve Roberts
Steering Committee Chairman
